 Although the Crozet Islands fall within the 12-miles territorial limit of Cape Town, the ice-breaker is unable to come in range because of the fast ice. The Norwegian cruise, however, is able to come in range but has to wait for the transfer of the scientists.

The question is: Why? And an answer is not available either from the scientists or the captain. Meanwhile, the passengers, concerned about the fate and future of the scientists, are worried that they might not be able to see their loved ones again. So, what is the situation? Why is the scientists’ fate uncertain? How can the passengers help to hand the tapes over to Zuma or the other leader of the country to resolve this situation?

The answer is: At last, when Zuma became president in 1999, he too would go into exile as his leader of the country. He had to resolve the issue that was in the forefront of the country, which is the issue of political reform. The passengers were not cleared up swiftly, it would be ideal. Thevenin will escort the passengers to the French astern of the ice-breaker. She is to hand the tapes over to Zuma’s top prosecutor involved in the case. Thevenin is not a skilled lawyer, but he is a brave and honest man.
